

Hydrangeas galore in Amagansett
Navigating a hillside in Bellevue Washington
Crisp and clean and simple and very modern
The amber wave in Mountsier Estate: Nutley NJ
The ideas begin on paper for the Given Garden
InSitu: Redding CT, Land Morphology

Changing Values:

Looking at Sustainable Strategies:

Issaquah Creek with and Active Salmon Run
Filtering water flowing into Lake Washington

The Inside Moving Out:

Thomas church and his pioneering ideas:

Hidden Cove and a look to the East
1820 House and needs for modern living
Terraces in Short Hills, Medina, Tacoma and Seattle- small is not limiting
A family garden
English ex-patriots in Rhode Island

Conclusion:

Cheap and cheery at the experiment station on 2415 E Calhoun St

To my way of seeing, a garden is not a succession of small rooms or little effects but a large tableau, whose elements are inextricably linked to the accomplishments of the entire garden, just as in a painting all passages conduce to the effect of the whole.

Robert Dash, Notes from Madoo

Richard Hartlage

Land Morphology

1512 Alaskan Way, Seattle WA 98101

O 206443-2120, M 206-512-9433

Richard@landmorphology.com

Instagram @landmorphology

Wisdom sits in places

Apache Proverb